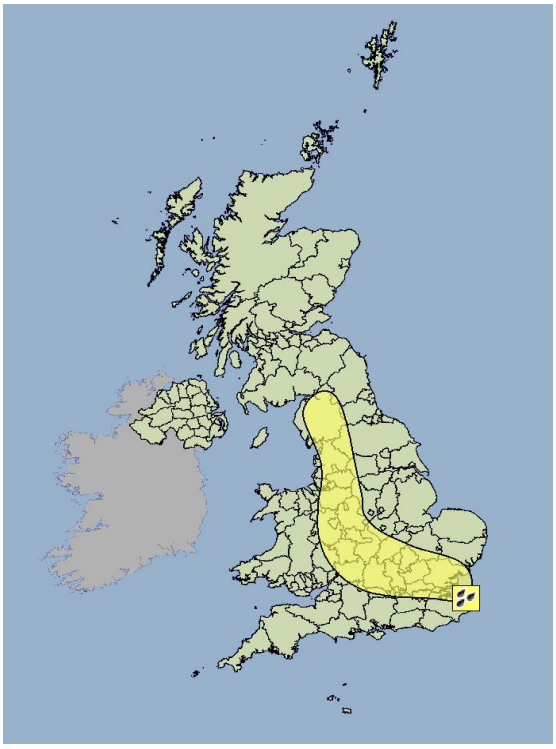
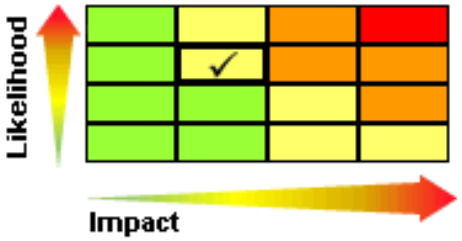
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Whilst today's airmass is less unstable than the one which brought Tuesday's torrential downpours, there is still the likelihood of some heavy, thundery showers developing as temperatures rise this afternoon. Many places will miss these, but where showers do occur they are likely to be heavy and slow-moving, leading to surface water on roads and difficult driving conditions. Lightning may also be a hazard.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 13:45 on Wed, 08th Jun 2016 until 20:00 on Wed, 08th Jun 2016

Scattered heavy, perhaps thundery, showers are expected to develop on Wednesday afternoon. Please be aware of the risk of localised flooding and lightning strikes. The showers will die out steadily through Wednesday evening.

This is an update to the warning, extending yellow area further north into Cumbria and a little further east across northern England and the Midlands.
